INCREASE YOUR WINDOW OF TOLERANCE - IT WILL MAKE A DIFFERENCE TO BOTH STUDENTS AND COLLEAGUES

Making KS3 Count – Matt J Bromley

This is the second time Matt Bromley has featured in Plan A advent recommendations. This book was my current reading when I was appointed Headteacher and I continued to use, develop and adapt the ideas within it throughout my headship. The book explores the importance of transition, not just KS2 to KS3 but helps the reader to reflect on transition between every year group. Academic, pastoral and behavioural expectations are explored whilst students are within our stewardship. This book (before it became a National buzzword) shows the importance of getting our curriculum right ... a book before its time, which demonstrates the skill of the author to have the heart of education as his motivational factor.

A THOUGHT FOR YOUR CLASSROOM ...

Recognise what / who presses your intolerance button. Being aware will help you to keep it in check. A post it note on your planner with a discreet reminder word to keep you accountable for increasing your own window of tolerance. Don't justify why you are right, see things differently! Just imagine if all staff in your school did this 😊
